Customer Reviews

I bought this book to use with my son and daughter so we could identify wildflowers we see along our country roads and also to identify wildflowers that we pick to press for projects. Some of the most common flowers that we see around NYS aren't found in this book. It seems like some of the less common wildflowers are included instead. Sometimes from the descriptions it's still difficult to determine and identify the flowers we found. That being said, I ordered the shell book in this series for the beach and we found that book much more useful!

Help your child increase their powers of observation, connect with nature and learn about the world around them with this series of "Field Guide" science books for young children. You can begin by using these to educate yourself and prepare for your nature walks with your very young child, 2 to 3 years. It will help you point out interesting things to look at and give you vocabulary you can introduce in a casual way. But these are probably best suited for a child who can already read and take notes on what they observe, ages 7 and up. This is just one in a series that includes Rabbits and Squirrels, Birds, Nests and Eggs, Animal Tracks, just to name a few.

I really love this whole bookset for my daughter. It helps you identify flowers you may see around your homestead or in town on the sides of the road. This book is great for a nature kid.

Bought for Birthday Present for 9 year old that has become quite an outdoors girl. Book is easy to understand and has scrape book pages in the back for her to add her own little touches.

It's written for kids but I love it for adults as well. Easy to understand, just enough information to get an idea about the wildflowers, no unnecessary details. I enjoy its simplicity tremendously.

Again, an excellent offering from this series. The detailed drawings and informative text enable even the youngest users to benefit from just even looking through the book. I'm definitely carrying this along in my backpack this summer at camp!

The mother of the five year old girl, to whom I gave this, was very happy with it.

My 9 year old son loves these books!
