The Price Of Stones: Building A School For My Village (Center Point Platinum Nonfiction)

Synopsis

Can one person really make a difference in the world; Growing up in Uganda, Kaguri overcame poverty to earn a degree from the national university and worked as a human rights advocate, eventually making his way to pursue studies at Columbia University. When he returned to his village with his American bride, they were overwhelmed by the plight of his village's many AIDS orphans and vowed to open the first tuition-free school for these children. Despite daunting obstacles -- lack of funds, skepticism from almost everyone, a lack of supplies, and corrupt school inspectors -- the couple doggedly built one classroom after another.

Customer Reviews

This story is so touching. It helped me to understand the culture, the people, and the hope that they have. God is Great! This story shows how one person can help to inspire others to do big things and change many lives. Read it! FYI: The e-book title is "A School for My Village: A Promise to the Orphans of Nyaka"

I had the pleasure of meeting Jackson Kaguri, when he and I competed in a 12 mile obstacle course together. I had no idea at the time that I was meeting the founder and director of an international organization that helps rescue orphans from the cycle of poverty. Of course I was interested to read his book after I discovered this about him. What a wonderful story of serving others, and believing that making a difference does start in the heart of one man (or woman). By trusting in God, and relying on Him to provide what we cannot provide on our own, miracles are happening every day at the Nyaka school in western Uganda. I am inspired to further examine where my time and money goes, and to get more involved in helping the orphans of the world. Read this book, and then pray about making a decision to spend less time on self, and more time on what God would have us do.

A truly inspiring story!
